TOKE of the WEEK!

INTRODUCING OC WEEKLY'S NEW Online Cannabis Review Column

For this latest edition of the 420 Guide, we want to introduce everyone to our weekly medical marijuana review column, Toke of the Week. In this space, our stable of card-carrying cannabis connoisseurs will be reviewing all the latest strains, edibles and other cannabis-related products. Whether you are a cancer survivor trying to wean yourself from prescription medication or just a typical clinically overstressed suburban smoker, this column is your go-to destination for all-things ganja. Make sure to check us out every week online at ocweekly.com!

For the moment, we are only reviewing dispensaries in Santa Ana that are fully licensed by the law. We do not want to get good potpreneurs who aren't fully licensed by an Orange County city in trouble lest they suffer a stupid police like the one that afflicted our pals at One Love in Long Beach, whose infuriating plight we also include in this package. Enjoy, and smoke (or edible. Or vape) away!

Strain: BLACK MAMBA

Written ROBERT FLORES

DISPENSARY: HAND N HAND PATIENT CARE
2400 Pullman St Ste B, Santa Ana (714) 586-5687

PRICE: $18 PER GRAM, $45 PER EIGHTH

THE BLACK MAMBA is a hybrid Indica, a cross between Black Domina and Blue Bubblejuice. It was originally named after the African snake but lately it's been compared to the other Black Mamba, Kobe Bryant. And in keeping with its namesake, this bud will immediately retire you to your couch or bed. You'll sit numb and wondering what hit you, like most opponents of the Lakers in Kobe's heyday.

I visited Hand N Hand Patient Care after hearing through the weedvine that they had this premium strain of bud in stock. In allowing 20 legit dispensaries to exist, the city of SanTana has raised the bar in the rules and regulation of said dispensaries. This will allow the consumer to purchase from an ever-widening variety of cannabis-related products without the fear of arrest if you have the proper doctor recommendation. Random Fact Alert: Your California Doctor's note is legal in Las Vegas, Nevada. Noice!

The Black Mamba is dense and sticky with resin. Instead of grinding some bud for my pipe, I took it apart by hand, not wanting to rip up the tiny orange hairs. It tasted slightly fruity, not harsh at all, but I could feel it expand quickly, so I was sure to take short hits and enjoy this Grade A bud instead of coughing my way to a buzz. It took a good ten minutes before I could really feel the numbing effect—this could definitely knock you out if you kept at it, but that's no fun. Of course, if you're currently going through chemo (like this humble reviewer did on the way to beating Stage 4 colon cancer) KNOCK YOURSELF OUT!! For the uninitiated, chemo can keep you awake for up to 48 hours straight. #FUCKCANCER!

Black Mamba is Top Shelf stuff. Smoke a blunt, watch a movie—but don't Black Mamba and drive!!! ✱

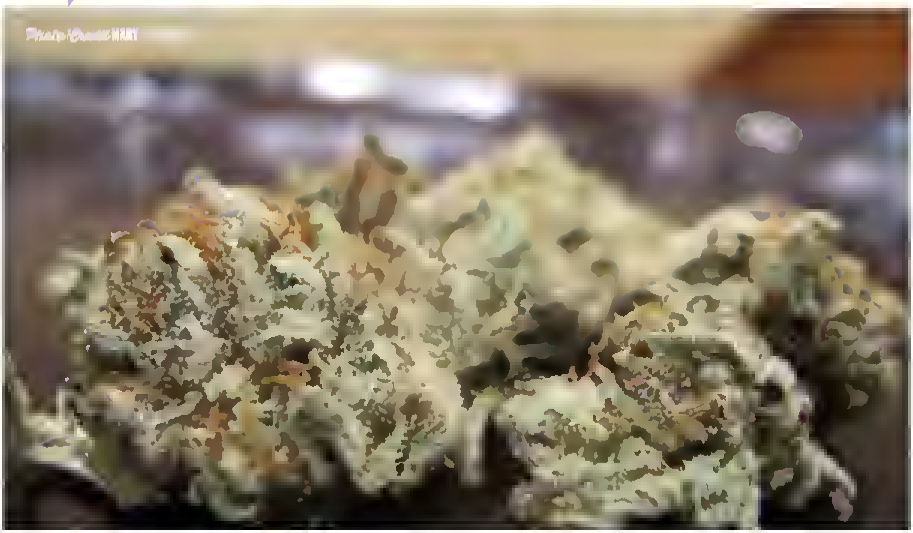
Strain: NORTHERN LIGHTS

Written By MARY CARREON

DISPENSARY: SOUTH COAST SAFE ACCESS
1900 Warner Ave Santa Ana CA 92705

PRICE: $25 PER GRAM; $60 PER EIGHTH



THE MOST CONFUSING thing about marijuana is that the industry doesn't have a system for enforcing consistency—and there's a good reason for that. Every plant is grown differently. But the issue still remains. So what do you do when a strain is widely known for being "purely" indica, yet you find it at a reputable dispensary as a sativa dominant hybrid? You try it for yourself, which is exactly what I did when I was recommended Northern Lights at South Coast Safe Access in Santa Ana.

I asked the knowledgeable budtender for something that sparks creativity and energy—preferably a sativa— and with no further questions, she pulled out a glass jar of Northern Lights. Perplexed about what I've always considered the strain from the Pacific Northwest to be, I went with her suggestion. She checked the boxes on the label indicating that I was about to purchase a sativa dominant hybrid. As she packed up my eighth, she told me that SCSA prides itself on the fact that all medicine sold in the dispensary is lab tested and grown without any herbicides or pesticides. In other words, the Northern Lights they had in stock was a proven sativa hybrid.

When I arrived back at my house, I went into inspection mode. Under the light, the dense, green buds look like they're covered in sugar. Long auburn strands look like thick hairs sprinkled through out the crystal coated leaves giving color depth to the round-ish nugs. Under a magnified glass, the spring green nugs sparkle with fervor like faceted emeralds.

Grinding the nugs revealed the light stickiness of the herb, making it easy to roll into a joint. Unsure of whether to expect the zooming high of a sativa or the melting sensation of an indica, I plunged into a sesh. The smoke tasted like spicy leather with a tinge of citrus. Upon exhale, however, the smoke tasted sweet yet smelled like earth.

The next thing I knew my room was filled with the still haze of marijuana smoke. Clearly medicated, I felt like I had powered down multiple cups of black tea, minus the jitters or any of the caffeine anxiety. Needless to say, I felt ardently motivated to get up and do something with the day.

Unsure of how to take advantage of my cannabis induced inspiration, I decided to call an Uber, pick up a friend and head to a exotic gem store in hopes to find stones to make jewelry with. What I didn't realize was that the store I chose to go to was inside Knott's Berry Farm. In other words, I was extremely puzzled when Marshall the Uber driver dropped us off at the theme park.

We wandered around the perimeter of Knott's trying to find the Geode Shop. We approached strangers to ask for directions, and they looked at us like extraterrestrials asking for directions to the nearest portal back to Venus. After 30 minutes of trying to find the store, we made it into the park free of charge with a guide who led us to the Geode Shop. When we stepped foot into the store, the heavens sang. Northern Lights had shone its celestial glow upon us.

SCSA's Northern Lights is definitely more sativa than indica, and highly recommended for a day full of adventure. ✷

Strain: F###CANCER

DISPENSARY: FROM THE EARTH
3023 S. Orange, Santa Ana

PRICE: $10 PER GRAM; $35 PER EIGHTH

Written By ROBERT FLORES

WHEN I WENT THROUGH my treatment for stage four colorectal cancer I used mostly strains of indica which are also high in cannabidiol, or CBD, which helps fi ght nausea and has a host of other medical benefi ts that may even include fi ghting tumors. I also would use the occasional Hubby Bar which is a hash laced candy, tons of CBD. Getting high is secondary when you have the toxins of chemotherapy fl owing through your veins. I found medical marijuana so helpful that I would testify before Congress on its benefi ts. Hell, I'll even talk to the Santa Ana City Council or better yet give them a copy of my book, #FUCKCANCER.

F###Cancer is a Sativa with a higher CBD (13.4 percent) than THC (5.8 percent) level. Some of your more exotic strains are between 25% -32% THC, but they're almost devoid of any CBD attributes. Which is fine if you want a great buzz and want to see Deadpool for the 10th time. But if you want to get a buzz and find relief from chronic pain, neuropathy, anxiety, MS, epilepsy, then a strain like F###Cancer is for you.

Unfortunately, when I had cancer three years ago, F###Cancer wasn't easily available. But when I visited From the Earth recently, I was very excited to see the strain on the menu. The buds were very fresh and spongy. I used a pipe for my first tokes. Smooth, piney, a strong skunky aroma. Right away I felt very relaxed, especially in my eyes and forehead, as the stress of the day melted away. One bowl and I was done–stoned and ready to watch a movie. I really didn't feel the usual sativa effects, in fact, I fell asleep halfway through Tobey Maguire pretending to be Bobby Fischer. Check and Checkmate. ✷

Written By MARY CARREON

AS GIRL SCOUT season's in full swing, I figured no other ganja would better compliment my stash of frozen Thin Mints than an eighth of Space Cookies—the genetic relative of Girl Scout Cookies (GSC), California's indica sweetheart. Something about the pairing intuitively made sense, just like watching The Wizard of Oz while listening to Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon. So when I learned that From the Earth, one of Santa Ana's legal medical marijuana storefronts, had Space Cookies in stock, I had to swing by.

Among Cannasseurs (connoisseurs of cannabis), Space Cookies is known for its ability to launch users into another realm of time and space, while creating feelings of intense euphoria and full body relaxation. Its effects make the strand popular among those who suffer from chronic stress, anxiety, migraines, physical pain, depression and insomnia.

The eighth I bought is mostly comprised of smaller nugs, a characteristic feature of this strain. The small, popcorn shaped marijuana nuggets are masked in thick layers of tricomes, or crystals, giving the weed a milky-green color. The dark orange hairs dispersed throughout the flower appear more prominent as a result. Under the light, however, the herb's beauty is put on display as the tricome crystals sparkle like diamonds.

After 10 minutes of hypnotic inspection, I finally sparked up. Upon inhale, the smoke tasted a bit earthy. With the exhale, however, sweeter notes dominated the taste. In three cloudy puffs, the stresses of the day disintegrate. There was a noticeable feeling of lightness throughout my body, as I lie on my yoga mat with my limbs spread wide. Lifted by the strain's 27 percent THC content, my mind lost itself in the song "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes" by Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young. Even though it's one of the most played songs in my iTunes, I was convinced I'd never heard it before.

Images of mint chocolate cookie heaven invaded my zen and aborted my yoga plans. I didn't even get to the third pose of my sun salutation before I made a spastic dash for the kitchen. I opened the freezer but, alas, my Thin Mints were gone, and now I was too Space Cookied to do anything about it.

I settled for a pint of Ben & Jerry's Half Baked instead, and got half way through it before I began melting into the couch. Proceed with caution when using the Space Cookie—it's a force to be reckoned with. ✱

VAPING HAS COME a long way from when I first started, back in 2012, so, so long ago. I felt like I was rubbing two sticks together to get my pen lit. Now all you have to do is inhale and you're enjoying your favorite flavor of cannabis oil. It's a nice alternative to lighting up a joint or pipe. Also very convenient and discreet: concerts, beer festivals, the drive-thru at Del Taco are some of my favorite spots.

The pen is sold separately from the oil cartridge. You can purchase them at most dispensaries or smoke shops. I wouldn't invest too much money in one; $25 should get you a good, reliable pen. It's the oils where you should spend your money wisely. Kurvana is rated very highly in taste and potency. There are plenty of other brands out there you might want to try and that's always fun. At the legit shops in SanTana you will find a great variety of indica, sativa and hybrid cartridges, but Kurvana is also offering some that they have infused with the CBD chemical, the medicinal part of the cannabis plant.

Banana Smoothie is 22% CBD, the highest they carry. It's also 22% THC. So this oil packs a punch. A subtle punch. The first afternoon I tried the Banana Smoothie I was off work, running errands, I started vaping around 3 p.m., had dinner around 6p.m. and was sound asleep by 9 p.m. It is very smooth, sweet banana flavor, the high was a happy, go lucky high as I was able to function but then BOOM. I normally go to sleep around 11:30 p.m., so 9 was a tad bit early for me.

So I tried it again the next day. Same results. If you are looking to relax and don't want to take over the counter sleeping pills then I HIGHLY recommend the Banana Smoothie, our Toke of the Week! ✷

COPS FAKE DOCTOR'S NOTE

to take down family-run Long Beach dispensary

Written By NICK SCHOU

ON THE AFTERNOON of Feb. 3, Long Beach's leafy Bluff Park neighborhood resembled a major crime scene. Police cruisers with flashing lights idled near the intersection of Temple Avenue and Broadway Boulevard, while undercover backup units parked on side streets. Asked about all the activity by a reporter who happened by his vehicle, an officer on the scene remarked that the police were busy carrying out a "narco operation."

But despite the ominous verbiage, the perps weren't exactly dangerous criminals. Instead, they were proprietors of the One Love Beach Club, a family-run cannabis collective that had been operating openly, if quietly, in the city for years. Police raided One Love after a detective provided the club with a doctor's note as well as a driver's license and proof of city residency. The sting operation—if you can call it that—flies in the face of state law, which allows cannabis clubs to provide marijuana to patients with a physician's note.

After the club sent one of its drivers to deliver the cannabis, police pulled over the vehicle, impounded it and arrested the driver before bashing down the dispensary's door with a battering ram. "They could have knocked on the door, but they had just started using the battering ram and wanted to see how it worked," said One Love's owner, Jeff Abrams, who was out on a delivery when the raid took place but whose two adult sons were detained inside the shop. "They were right there with the key, but they smashed it in, and they were giddy about how well the battering ram worked." Although the police claim to have confiscated 600 marijuana plants, Abrams says that, in reality, only one-tenth of the plants were flowering. "They took 59 mature plants and 60 mother plants that never flower," Abrams explained. "The rest were 512 clones that we sell to people so they can grow their own cannabis and stay out of harm's way of the Long Beach narcotics division."

> "They could have knocked ON THE DOOR, but they had just started USING THE BATTERING RAM and wanted to see how it worked"

The police also carted off all of One Love's patient records, which Abrams says is a violation of the dispensary's federal privacy rights. "This was a closed facility—no public going in or out," Abrams said. "A lot of our members are teachers and other people who don't want to be seen walking into a marijuana dispensary just to get their medicine," he continued, adding that one of his patients is a DEA agent.

Abrams opened One Love in 2009, back when the Long Beach City Council was eager to regulate pot shops and figure out a way to make cash on the cultivation and sale of cannabis. He and his sons (college graduates who had tried their hands with a dispensary in Los Angeles but were hoping to stay closer to home) met with city officials and were among the "lucky" winners of the city's November 2010 lottery, which allowed several dozen dispensaries to apply for permits. "We were on the front page of the Long Beach Press-

Telegram," Abrams recalls, with more than a hint of bitterness in his voice. "We paid 17 different fees to various Long Beach city agencies. Everybody wants to put a hand in your pocket, but that's okay."

By the time the city reversed course and passed an outright ban on storefront dispensaries in 2011, Abrams said, he had spent tens of thousands of dollars making his dispensary meet the city's strenuous codes. He considers himself luckier than some of the other lottery winners who invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in high-tech cannabis-cultivation and -distribution centers that have never opened, despite the fact that in both 2010 and 2014, city residents overwhelmingly supported initiatives to regulate and tax medical-marijuana collectives in the city.

"We have a 15 percent tax on recreational marijuana and a 6 percent tax on medical marijuana on the books already," Abrams said. "But the city has taken in none of this revenue for six years, and now they have the balls to ask for a 1-cent sales tax because they are broke, instead of just allowing revenue collection from the marijuana industry."

The timing of the raid of the One Love dispensary highlights the city's bipolar stance on medical marijuana. On Feb. 2, the City Council voted down a proposal by Councilwoman Suzie Price (a prosecutor with the Orange County district attorney's office) that would have allowed delivery services to operate legally in Long Beach. Although the city had initially considered allowing 36 delivery services, that number had gradually dropped from 27 to 18 to nine. Price's measure would have restricted the number of delivery services to just four—a number viewed as a betrayal by medical-marijuana activists such as Abrams—but apparently still too high for her colleagues to allow.

Despite the failure of Price's pro-delivery ordinance, not to mention the raid of his club, Abrams said he will continue to deliver cannabis to his roughly 300 members. "I promised my patients we will never stop serving them unless I am dead or in jail," he said. "Within 24 hours, I had vendors stepping up to help me with inventory. There is always a way. We are the cockroaches, and they think they can stomp us out, but they can't."

Along with his wife and two sons and another driver, Abrams faces misdemeanor charges stemming from the raid; the driver who was arrested during the raid was charged with felony transportation of $150 worth of marijuana. Because of the driver's legal status, Abrams declined to make the driver available for an interview. However, another driver who worked for One Love until the day of the raid agreed to speak anonymously.

"My delivery job was one of the more unexpectedly fulfilling jobs of my life," the driver said. "Many of our patients were people with limited mobility who, even if the ban on storefront dispensaries were lifted, would still have trouble accessing their medicine without the delivery service. The gratitude that many expressed was very touching."

On two separate occasions, the driver recalled, he was told that he was doing "God's work," which, he says, was more appreciation than he'd ever received in any other job he's worked.

"I delivered to patients with MS, cancer, cerebral palsy," the driver continued. "I never once feared anything from any of them, but there was always the fear of being arrested." After the raid, when the other driver was charged with a felony, he reluctantly quit. "I no longer could fool myself into thinking that the Long Beach City Council and police force wouldn't go out of their way to interfere with sick people getting their medicine," he said. "Mission accomplished, Long Beach, I guess." ✱

420 GAMES Bring Marijuana Marathon TO SANTA MONICA

Written By MARY CARREON

STONERS FROM ACROSS Southern California gathered at the Santa Monica Pier this past Saturday for the first stop of the the 420 Games, a tour dedicated to de-stigmatizing the pothead stigma. Starting off the day with a 4.20 mile run from Santa Monica to the Venice Pier and back, the mini-marathon was full of spirited cannabis users—some on skateboards, a few on green scooters and others rocking green face-paint—determined to prove that you can live a healthy, active lifestyle while regularly smoking weed.

Prior to the jog from Santa Monica to Venice, Steve DeAngelo, cannabis thought leader and owner of Harborside Health Center—a dispensary that has been hailed as a national prototype— kicked off the celebrations with a keynote address. After thanking everyone for coming out, he explained that by participating in events like the 420 Games, we are moving closer to a more unified and realistic understanding of marijuana. The crowd ate it up as cheers and hi-fives were shared in the name of legalization.

Live music, food trucks, a Lagunitas beer booth, Eaze and other cannabis vendors set up shop by the pier, and as soon as the runners arrived back in Santa Monica, the real festivities began. People were spotted walking around with massive, green piñatas on their shoulders, wearing leaf-covered hats and long, multi-colored dreadlocks. The Lagunitas beer tasting table was, by far, the biggest hit of the afternoon, even though their offerings were fully of the hops variety.

As the party at the pier came to an end, folks migrated over to the V Lounge in Santa Monica, where Pato Banton brought the reggae vibes and The Kyle Turley Band chipped in with some alt-rock spirit. Known for their specialty cocktails and appetizer-sized bites, the V Lounge made sure everyone was good and tossed. When looking around, everyone appeared a bit pie-eyed with a drink(s) in hand—signs of a successful event.

The 420 Games have a San Francisco edition in August, as well as stops in Colorado, Seattle and Oregon. Just like the Santa Monica rendition, those events will also feature marathons, mountain bike races (for Colorado and Oregon), and other competitions in support of de-stigmatizing marijuana and celebrating its empowering properties. See you next year! ✶
